Alastair Lichten

Alastair Lichten is the author of the Humanist Dad blog where he writes about parenting, family, relationships, politics and life from the perspective of a progressive humanist parent. He's also an active member of Brighton Sunday Assembly and previously led on education campaigns at the National Secular Society for eight years, as well as spending three years working on community building at Humanists UK.

Hurdles and opportunities: Making Sunday Assembly family friendly.

Drawing on his experiences with Sunday Assemblies and local humanist groups, Alastair Lichten will look at some of the reasons families with children can be drawn to or put off Sunday Assembly, and discuss strategies and practical actions to make your Assembly more family friendly, regardless of size or resources. Come ready to share your experiences (positive or negative) and ideas.
